Joe Peters rose from street cop to serving Presidents Clinton and Bush 43 as a leader in the efforts to combat drug trafficking and battle international terrorism at the White House Drug Czar's Office.

As a Federal Prosecutor, Joe's accomplishments include the convictions of Philadelphia Mob Boss "Little Nicky" Scarfo, his underboss, and 16 mob soldiers. This three month trial, conducted by Joe and several Federal Prosecutors, resulted in one of the most significant Mafia family convictions in U.S. history. As a result, he received the United States Department of Justice's John Marshall Award. The Associated Press called Joe and his fellow prosecutors the "Modern Day Untouchables."

Joe has presented to law enforcement officials from around the world, and has trained military and civilian personnel in Panama and consulted with law enforcement in Israel, Italy, UK, Dubai, Kuwait and Qatar.

A native of Lackawanna County, Joe has devoted his career to public service, and served for more than 15 years in the Pennsylvania Office of Attorney General, rising from an intern to become the state's top drug prosecutor. Currently Peters works with national and international law enforcement organizations on terrorism and related intelligence and prosecution issues.

Joe graduated from King's College and later the Dickinson School of Law. He is a member of the E. B. Jermyn Lodge #2 Fraternal Order of Police and has been honored by the PA Chiefs of Police Association by being named a Life Member. He is an associate member of the Pennsylvania District Attorney's Association and a member of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, where he sits on its Terrorism Committee.

Joe is the oldest of five children of Gene and Peg Peters and is the proud father of his son Max; his father served two-terms as a GOP Mayor of Scranton. In 2004 Joe was the Republican nominee for Pennsylvania Auditor General.
